

Abstract

A method of making strong, high surface area alumina catalyst or catalyst supports from transition aluminas by forming a plasticized and homogenized batch which is heated under moisture-retaining conditions at a temperature and for a time at least sufficient to obtain hydroxylation of the transition alumina.